I have a query for example (simplified): select date_part(hour,createdon), date_part(minute, createdon) I need to translate this to a 2-dimensional array containing a series of pre-written date and time segments (the number of segments is variable) and store it in a second select statement. For example, based on the query above, the array should look like this: ['23:00', '23:30', '23:45'] The original code: select date_part(hour, createdon), date_part(minute, createdon) from TABLE_NAME If I write the array as: $timeArray = []; $arr = [23, 59]; foreach ($arr as $i) { $timeArray[0].= '23'; $timeArray[1].= $i; } The resulting array: Array ([0] => 23.0 [1] => 23 [2] => 59.0) Is it possible to build an array from the SQL query result? I've tried with a few loops and functions with no success: $timeArray = array(); while ($row = mysql_fetch_assoc($result)) {
